

X-Ray Exam

What is an X-Ray?

At Allegheny Imaging of McCandless, routine X-Rays or Radiographs are performed on the newest type of equipment called Digital Radiography. The body part in question is positioned and X-Rays are then passed through this body part. Your body is made up of different tissues. All of which have different thicknesses and allow different amounts of X-Ray to pass through them. For example: Bones are thick, so they appear white on the film where as air is thin, so it appears black on the film. These unique differences create the image.
